EDITORIAL FLINGS

The kiddies are back in school now, and the teachers have a chance to estimate just what it must mean to be a parent.

Well, we can view the passing of bobbed hair without a twinge of regret provided no movement is started for a revival of the "rat."

The world won't go broke if you fail to make good; but it may wear a scar somewhere because you didn't come through when needed.

The flapper who swears she's sixteen in order to get a chauffeur's license is likely to be embarrassed about six years from now when she answers "nineteen" at the County Clerk's office.

An advertisement in a recent issue of the Louisville Courier-Journal is headed: "One Hundred Ways To Make Money." This won't do, it gets one muddled. What we yearn for is knowledge of one sure way to make money.

After many years' observation and from the results of much listening, we have come to the conclusion that all the wisdom in the world is contained in the following pertinent remark by the late J. G. Holland: "Gossip is always a personal confession either of malice or imbecility."

These sex-murders are always maudlin to the decent public, which has to stand for a lot of rotten stuff put on it by the enterprising "yellow press," which plasters the front page with rank reportorial messes, dished up in the latest Hollywood style. Is this merry old world going to the demdition howl-rows?

"What is that noise?" the good wife asked.

In sudden terror quaking;
Her husband soothed her: "Do not fear."

"Tis but the dawn breaking;"
"Alas, alas," the wife cried out,
"That hired girl needs a thumping,
She'll have us out of house and home,
She's always dropping something."

Anxious Inquirer comes to the front again this week with another query: "Is it good breeding to stare at a lady in a ball room who hasn't on more clothes than decency allows?"

Well, dear Anx, this is a stunner, surely. The conventional rules of polite society allow you to stare as much as you want to. Why do you suppose the lady wears such delectable costumes unless to expose herself and invite the attention of masculine eyes. Yea, brother or sister, why, indeed?

Fair-minded Paris people can not pass up the opportunity of protesting against the rule of the owners of the Paris baseball club which compels women to pay an extra fifteen cents for the privilege of sitting in the grand stand during a ball game. Can it be expected that they shall spread eagle on the bleachers, like more common men? Where else are they to go but in the grandstand? And what can justify the management in forcing them to pay for the privilege, when they have no other place to go? In the name of chivalry, and of the women of Paris and the county, change the ruling, and give the women a chance.

Now that long skirts are going to be the vogue, mothers can switch their old short ones to their twelve-year-old daughters, but rigging out the flapper is going to be hard on father's pocketbook.

The autumn leaves are turning red, but the autumn bolshevist is the coal mine operator who desires a dictatorial dictatorship of the gang that has the coal and looks serenely forward to getting all he wants.

There was a Paris man so benighted Who never knew when he was slighted;
He went to a party,
And ate just as hearty
As if he'd been really invited.

Billie Burgess, a Milwaukee newspaper reporter, has become a British lord. A good bedtime story for newspaper men to tell their children. They will believe it originated with a superior of Hans Christen Anderson.

One gathers that President Mapother, of the Louisville & Nashville, rather enjoys this opportunity, the first which has come to him, of informing those whom it may concern that, when he enters into an endurance test, he never quits.

OUR QUOTA OF SOAP

(New York Herald)

If all the soap that is manufactured annually in the United States could be floated—and much of it could be—it would represent a tonnage not greatly less than that of the United States Navy, battleships, cruisers, destroyers, submarines, transports and all. The bureau of the Census has just issued figures for 1919 according to which 2,432,591,000 pounds of soap was manufactured in the United States that year. That is 1,216,295 tons. These figures are for all forms of soap.

Figured on the basis of the present estimated population of the country there is produced each year twenty-two pounds of soap for every person in the country, although there is perhaps no commodity which varies more in point of individual consumption than this one. More soap is being produced in proportion to the population than in the output of twenty years ago—about five pounds more for every individual in the country.

WOMEN'S WOES

Paris Women Are Finding Relief At Last

It does seem that women have more than a fair share of the aches and pains that afflict humanity; they must "keep up," must attend to duties in spite of constantly aching backs, or headaches, dizzy spells, bearing-down pains; they must stoop over, when to stoop means torture. They must walk and bend and work with racking pains and many aches from kidney ills. Keeping the kidneys well has spared thousands of women much misery. Read of a remedy for kidney ills only that is endorsed by people you know.

Mrs. J. R. Moore, 133 E. Eighth street, Paris, says: "I was in bad shape with my kidneys. My back nearly killed me with pain. There was a steady, dull ache just over my kidneys and I was weak and miserable. I often had to let my housework go undone and I got so dizzy, black specks came before my eyes. My feet and ankles swelled. I doctored for a time but got no relief until I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. My health was greatly improved in a short time and two boxes cured me. It is a pleasure for me to recommend Doan's."

Price 60c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Moore had. Foster-Milburn Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

HANG ON

Don't get excited and throw up the game
Just because some happy prospect went lame,
Stick to the ship, and still hope just the same—
For there's always another day coming.

Don't let your courage fall down before your fears,
Don't let your happiness scatter in tears.
Pay no attention to scoffings and jeers—
For there's always another day coming.

One little hour with a cold in the sky.
One little hour with a cloud in the and dry,
These things don't count in the sweet by-and-by—
For there's always another day coming.

Dempsey may fight Joe Beckett London, if enough British care to see a joke.

DEMOCRATIC CAMPAIGN BOOK, 1922

One hundred and thirty-two pages of facts, figures and arguments make the Democratic Campaign Book for 1922 a valuable source of interesting and valuable information concerning the failures and faithlessness of the Harding administration and the permanent achievements of the two preceding Democratic administrations.

All the issues of the present campaign are fully treated. The book will be a guide also to the understanding of the national campaign of 1924.

Individual copies of the Democratic Campaign Book will be supplied free of charge to National Committeemen and Committeewomen, State Chairmen, County Chairmen, Democratic candidates for the Senate and House of Representatives, listed Democratic speakers and to Democratic editors. PLAGUE OF LAWS

Probably almost any person except an ambitious member of a Federal or State Legislature will agree to the claim that the United States has more laws than are good for the people.

There are basic interests of State and Nation which should be set forth by specific legislation, but this does not apply to the large majority of measures too.

The needs of the public in the matter of legislation do not always seem to be considered of so much concern as the desire of some Legislators to earn a reputation in statesmanship.

Many hundreds of bills introduced in Congress do not get out of committees, but many others, with little more excuse for enactment cumber the statute books.

Instead of passing so many laws, which only confuse the public, the interests of the people would probably be served if a little time were given to repeal of the useless legislation.

As long as Congress and Legislatures are made topheavy by the desire of districts for representation, the surfeit of lawmaking is likely to continue indefinitely.

FISH JUMPED OVER HEAD

(Smith Grove Times)

Hugh Lander had a wonderful experience with a jumping bass; which he finally captured out of Nolin.

Lander left his pole and reel on the dam and wandered down the river with two companions. When he returned he found all of his line run out from the reel and the line caught some distance away from him on a rock. He jumped off in the water and waded down to the rock and got his line loose. Then he began his fight with the fish. He was standing waist deep in the water and the bass was churning the water. At one time he got the fish close up to his side and thought he had him, but he gave one monster jump and went over Lander's head. He then started down the stream with Lander and this expert angler was a little disconcerted by this jumping bass, but still held a tight line on him. Finally, after he was nearly worn out, the fish gave up and he was able to get his finger through his gills and landed him.

OF COURSE HE WAS INTERESTED

The other day THE NEWS man was walking down Main street. A man coming from the opposite direction, reading a paper, and not noticing whether his feet were leading him, collided with THE NEWS man. The other fellow suffered a broken shin, several smashed corns, a straw hat crushed and a pair of shell-rimmed spectacles very badly broken up. Upon examination the fact developed that the injured man was so absorbed in reading THE BOURBON NEWS that he did not know there was anyone else on the street. "I've no apology to make, sir," said the reader, "because I was so interested in THE NEWS that I didn't notice where you were going." "No need to apologize," said THE NEWS man, "for it would be perfectly natural for anyone to become interested in reading THE NEWS."

Plump Wives Preferred.

The Moors, like the Turks and other orientals, have a preference for plump wives, and throughout the empire of Morocco and in Tunis there are villages where the elder members of the adult population make a profession of fattening young women for the matrimonial market of Barbary.

Honey That Intoxicates.

The honey obtained on the banks of the Euphrates is of an intoxicating nature.

RETURNING FROM VACATION

Many people come back from summer vacations with flat pocket books and jaded bodies, strained by too much sight seeing, too long motor-ing, or indulgence in physical exercises to which their muscles were not accustomed. Yet for all that they are usually well satisfied, and would not have their money back if they could.

Many of these folks, however, take up their old job with a sigh of despondency, and wish their wanderlust might be satisfied by traveling all the time. The humdrum sights and sounds of daily life seem more depressing than usual. They often speak of putting on old harness, and they feel like a hard-worked horse whose skin has been chafed and worn by ill fitting straps and buckles.

The really ambitious person usually learns something during a vacation that will be useful in his work. He should have new ideas which he is anxious to try out. Even if he brought nothing like this home and his playtime was purely a frolic, he should be able to see his task in a new light.

Most people tend to get into the habit of routine work, doing their job just the same day after day. This is particularly true of women, for whom cooking and sweeping and washing dishes seem the same yesterday and forever. The mental eye gets dull in the midst of this sameness. The rested brain should be able to take up home and industrial problems with a new vigor and see things hidden before.

Too many people unfortunate do not get these satisfactions that come from travel. A multitude of workers have had more vacation than they want the past year, and can undertake no journeyings. When community life reaches its ideal, everyone will get off for a rest time in different surroundings, even if it is only to go to some near-by camp.

BILL AND I WENT FISHING

Bill and I went fishing—quit our beds at four.
Got a hasty breakfast and softly closed the door,
Packed the bait and tackle, pushed the boat away.
Took the oars and started—without a word to say.

Lake was smooth as crystal, sun was breaking thru
With a blaze of glory—old, but always new;
Bill and I both watched it, grateful for the day,
Spellbound by the beauty—but not a word to say.

Threw the anchor over, started in to fish,
Heard the reels a-clicking, heard the wet lines swish,
Now and then we'd get one big enough to play,
Sport and plenty of it—but not a word to say.

Bill was busy dreaming, I was thinking, too,
Lazy-like and wondering what makes skies so blue;
Puffed our pipes in silence, let our minds just stray
Round and round about us—but not a word to say.

Got back home that evening, happy as could be
I was proud of William he was proud of me,
Just the pal for fishing—here's the common touch—
Said it of each other—"Never take too much."

KEEPING CONGRESS INTACT

Since the State primary law was enacted a dozen years ago requiring the nomination of Congressmen in primaries there have been very few changes in the personnel of the Kentucky delegation at Washington. In that time not a single Congressman has been defeated for renomination and the only changes have been due either to voluntary retirement or election to another office.

It is argued that this has made for a better and stronger representation in Congress on the theory that the longer the tenure the better qualified the Congressman becomes for the duties imposed upon him.

Not only this but with seniority the rule to promotion, the long-time Congressman wields a wider and more potent influence by reason of his position on the important committees that virtually frame the legislative policies.

As a result of their long tenure the Kentucky Congressmen have places on practically every big committee in the National House of Representatives, which places the State in a most advantageous position in Federal lawmaking.

In the days when the nominations were made in conventions, the Congressman had little certainty of the endurance of his tenure. Frequently after a term or two he found himself the victim of a combination in the nominating convention and had to give way to another.

This resulted in frequent changes in the Congressional representation and a corresponding lack of influence among such members devoid of any experience. Now keeping Congressmen on the job is the rule rather than the exception in Kentucky.

NO MAGIC GOLD FINDER

There is no instrument that you can use to discover gold supposed to have been buried in an iron pot or steel safety box, writes the Director of the United States Geological Survey to a correspondent. Iron ore beds extended over large areas have been prospected for with success by means of the so-called "dip needle," but this instrument would not indicate the presence of a single pot or vessel in a particular spot. Neither is there any instrument that would indicate the presence of gold and silver or their ores. Iron attracts the "needle," but gold and silver, however attractive to man, are not magnetic.

SUPPOSED CORPSE ARGUES WITH EMBALMER

When a "corpse" sat up in a stretcher in Chicago, and argued with an embalmer, he was taken into court and fined for disorderly conduct. This happened when Jos. Ropp, 23, was found lying on the railroad tracks and turned over to undertakers in the belief that he was dead.
